"REASONING" DRAWS FIRE
Methods Employed To Set Wages Said To Cause Growing Resentment

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—Charging that the War Labor Board's wage stabilization policy "in effect freezes substandard wages," John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers today refused to join organized labor in support of the WLB as the final authority on wage control.

In an editorial in the United Mine Workers Journal—official publication of the union—the UMW bluntly charged that the WLB "has ducked and dodged behind every conceivable misapplication of sound reasoning."

The attack on the WLB by the Lewis union followed assurances given President Roosevelt by CIO President Philip Murray and A.F.L. President William Green that organized labor supports the WLB wage stabilization policy, established in the "little steel" decision.

Wage Czar Opposed
Murray and Green are believed to have asked the President to let wartime control of wages remain in the hands of the WLB instead of appointing a supreme wage "czar" as he reportedly is considering in drawing up his anti-inflation program.

In the rank and file of labor, the UMW charged, there is a growing resentment against the methods employed by the WLB to determine wages and labor grievances.

Conflicts Cited
"The intrusion of the OPA (Office of Price Administration) in labor affairs, the Manpower Commission's attempt to regiment all classes of labor, the constant conflict between these agencies, all tend to promote a growing dissatisfaction among the common people," the UMW editorial said.

The UMW declared that labor "is just about fed up with the kindergarten practices of the textbook bureaucrats."

Carload Of Medals Merited By Marines Who Captured Tulagi

(The first eye-witness story of the brilliant offensive in the Solomon Islands by an allied naval task force and American Marines is told in the following dispatch by Richard Tregaskis, International News Service correspondent who accompanied the expedition. The account, delayed in transmission, was written August 12. Since that date the allied forces have extended their operations in the enemy strongholds.)

TULAGI, Solomon Islands, Aug. 12—(Delayed)—The conquest of the Solomon Islands by American Marines will rank with the great war sagas of history.

Tough, hardened and modernly trained Americans swarmed over the beaches of Tulagi early on the morning of August 7 under cover of the guns of the allied fleet.

They met a strong and determined enemy who fought bitterly from dugouts and entrenchments.

But the conquest of the island bases today is complete except for the extermination of a handful of Japanese snipers on Tulagi.

48 Days on Raft

Tacticians would call the feat of the Marines "impossible" but that is a word they don't know. Difficult jobs they do quickly. The impossible takes a little longer.

So, in one of the fiercest and most intense battles of its kind in history, the marines took Tulagi, Gavuta and Tanambogo, honey-combed with seemingly impenetrable Japanese dugouts, and hill positions which swept our force with a deadly crossfire.

New Crop of Heroes

A new crop of marine heroes, ranking with the most exalted from Tripoli to Belleau Wood, was born in the three-day, knockdown, dragout battle preceding our victory.

The marines landed unopposed on the Tulagi beach, pushed toward the jungle and ridge of the island, then started their dangerous progress in fanning out over the length of the narrow little island.

They met their first resistance a few yards away, when they found a nest of dugouts, from which they were exposed to heavy sniping.

The marines pushed through the snipers, but the dugouts resisted for hours.

"It was impossible to approach the dugouts except from one direction," said Col. Merritt A. Edson, of Chester, Vermont. "One man had to crawl to the dugout and try to destroy it with dynamite grenades while continuously exposed to deadly fire."

"And no dugout could be considered wiped out until all the Japs inside were dead. The marines had to go clear inside and wipe them out."

"In one dugout we found 17 dead Japs."

The Japanese also operated mortars.

Maj. Justin G. Chambers, of Washington, D. C., suffered two broken wrists and severe lacerations of his face and legs in one mortar explosion.

After he was injured, he continued in action for several hours, and that night, though hospitalized, got to his feet and personally directed the removal of wounded to the rear.

Sergeant Gets Mad

One sergeant attempted to blow out a cave with grenades, but found the Japs would throw them out as fast as he tossed them in.

The doughy American sergeant then attempted to heave dynamite into the cave. It was thrown back at him, the explosion splintering his leg.

That's where he lost his temper. He ran inside, shooting his machine gun and killing four Japs who were shooting at him with automatic rifles.

Eight other Japanese were (Continued on Page Eight)

WLB THINKS ALUMINUM WORKERS WILL NOT STRIKE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—Despite a warning by Nick A. Zonarich, president of the CIO's aluminum workers, who has been authorized to call a strike in the vital aluminum industry, members of the War Labor Board today believed that no strike will occur.

If the strike does come, it will not be called, Zonarich indicated, until after next Tuesday when the union proposes to meet with aluminum company officials in an attempt to reopen negotiations.

FARM EXPERTS TO RECOMMEND MEATLESS DAYS

One Fourth Of Nation's Entire Supply Needed By Army And For Lend-Lease

ALLOCATION IN PROGRAM

Public Forewarned By Chief Who Cited Release Of Important Ships

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—Agriculture experts today reported that the WPB foods requirements committee has tentatively decided to recommend a program calling for allocation of the nation's limited meat supplies and "meatless days."

The American public was forewarned of a possible meatless day each week by President Roosevelt, who told his press conference that a meatless day in this country would save 30 to 40 ships to transport arms and munitions.

Formal announcement of the committee's plans has not yet been made because a statement containing the program is being circulated among its members for final approval.

The committee, headed by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, did announce, however, that requirements for the armed services and other needs of the United Nations will probably take one pound in every four of America's total meat supply.

"The food requirements committee continued its study of the meat requirements of U. S. military forces, our allies, and the U. S. civilian population," the announcement said.

"The tentative conclusion was reached that approximately one-fourth of the total U. S. meat supply will be required for military and Lend-Lease use."

SECOND FRONT OPENS WIDE IN STATE POLITICS

COLUMBUS, Aug. 29—A second front in Ohio's political war opened this week when a Bricker-sponsored increase of approximately $260 in the average monthly age pension check, to become effective shortly before the November 3 election, drew the fire of John McSweeney, Democratic gubernatorial nominee, who charged the increase smacked of politics.

The allegation loaded the second end of the double-pronged assault with which the Democrats hope to blast the Republicans out of office. They already were armed with the issue provided by the huge surplus of unexpended, unallocated funds piling up in the state treasury.

The surplus has been placed at amounts ranging from 20 to 90 million dollars, depending on who did the estimating. McSweeney asserts that the surplus was piled up by "unjust, unneeded taxes, at a time when local subdivisions were starved for tax sources and were in the worst financial plight in their histories."

HERO OF TULAGI SON OF HERO IN BOXER REVOLT

NEW YORK, Aug. 29—Capt. Harry L. Torgerson, who dynamited more than 50 Jap dugouts in the assault by the marines on Tulagi in the Solomon Islands, is the son of a hero, his family revealed here today.

In 1900, his father, the late Martin Torgerson, a Navy gunner's mate, won the congressional medal of honor for extraordinary bravery in the Boxer rebellion in China.

Before the war, Capt. Torgerson was employed by the New York stock exchange. He lived with a sister, Mrs. Marie Hilms of Lynbrook, L. I.

Picnic For Soldiers To Be Held Rain Or Shine

Whether it rains or shines Circleville community's big picnic at Gold Cliff park Sunday for about 200 Lockbourne air base trainees will be conducted.

I. W. Kinsey, committee chairman, said Saturday that sheltered space is available for 600 persons and that even though rain might fall the event will go on as scheduled.

He voiced a final appeal for automobiles and food, the cars to transport the men from the base and back again. All persons driving to the base are urged to report at the courthouse at 9 a. m. Sunday.

Any who will make the trip and have not yet notified Mrs. Larry Athey of their plans should telephone her at No. 466.

Any families planning to attend the picnic and having not yet informed members of the committee how many soldiers they will be able to feed should contact Mrs. M. M. Bowman, Mrs. Tom Renick, Mrs. Harry Heffner or Miss Rose Good.

A gala day is planned beginning at about 10 a. m. The picnic dinner will be served buffet style shortly after noon. A softball game will be played between air base men and the Lutheran church team, and numerous forms of entertainment, including swimming, dancing and skating will be provided for the soldiers free of charge.

An additional diversion was promised Saturday when Earl A. Smith, one of the instigators of the program, announced that the Adelphi band would be on hand during the afternoon.

Persons wishing to help promote the project and not being able to attend the picnic may make contributions all day Saturday at the Junior Chamber of Commerce War Bond and Stamp booth at Court and Main streets. Any money obtained through contribution will be turned over to the Lockbourne officials to help provide equipment for the recreation room.

Mrs. Ted Lewis, wife of Circleville's famed stage, screen and radio star, will be unable to attend the big picnic, but she is doing her bit.

She has contributed $30 to the Civilian Recreation committee with which to buy cigarettes for the Lockbourne boys.

Mrs. Lewis, a visitor here for a week, has returned to New York.

EARLY FROST LIKELY IN LOCAL DISTRICT

Weather observers at Circleville sewage disposal plant were informed Saturday in a letter from the state weather bureau that Kenton had a frost August 25, and that one can be expected here at an early date.

Friday night's rain totalled more than a quarter of an inch, the weather gauge showing .27 during the night.

Would Defer All Medical Students

Senator Sees Small Cities Stripped Of Surgeons And Physicians

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—Sen. Joseph C. Rosier (D. W. Va., today called on the Selective Service system to give serious consideration to permanent deferment from the draft of all medical students, if the nation's health is to be properly guarded.

"Small communities everywhere are being stripped of their physicians and surgeons," Rosier said. "The large cities are losing most of their younger and middle-aged practitioners."

Rosier, an educator for 51 years, has been on leave of absence as president of Fairmont College at Fairmont, W. Va., while serving in the senate. He also is a member of the committee on education and labor.

"If the war is long," he said, "and we draft the men of 18 and upward, we will have no new 'crop' of medical men entering pre-medical courses after this September except those few who begin at ages under 18."

He said also that the cost of obtaining a medical education has become so great that it "amounts to a small fortune beyond the reach of some men who might have been good physicians and surgeons."

As safeguards against a breakdown in national health during the war, Rosier said these things probably would have to be done:

1. Cut the medical courses, especially pre-medical work to less than four years.
2. Establish more dispensary clinics in both large and small communities to fit their particular needs.
3. Advise the public itself on how to guard its own health, through programs of education.
4. Assign the annual "crop" of medical men by quota to certain areas, with army and navy replacements being made by careful selection.

ARMED UNIONISTS HALT WORK ON VITAL OIL LINE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 29—Construction of the government's vital Texas-to-Illinois pipeline was at a standstill today as a result of interference by a small band of armed men near Cape Girardeau, Mo., according to I. E. Hull, vice-president and general manager of the War Emergency Pipeline Co.

Hull charged that 10 armed men, headed by Evan Dale, president of the Carbonade, Ill., local of the AFL's international hodcarriers, building and common laborers union brought about the forced cessation of work by a crew of 100 workmen.

Permission to remain on the job was asked by the workers, but Hull said he turned it down because violence was feared. A request was forwarded to Washington for soldiers to maintain order in event of trouble, Hull added.

PRETTY NURSE WOODED FOR CASH, NOT FOR HERSELF

MEDIA, Pa., Aug. 29—Sentence was deferred today pending action by a draft board on two men who admitted they wooed a pretty nurse so they could rob her of $63.

Clarence Lawrence, 35, said he met the nurse, Betty Heyniger, in a Media nursing home where he was also employed. He told Charles F. Moyer, 21, of Chester, the girl "sometimes has a lot of money on her" and the pair decided to rob her.

"Lawrence took the girl out," Moyer told the court. "I hid in the bushes. I had a toy pistol and took her money."

BULLETIN
NEW YORK, Aug. 29—Hard-fighting Soviet troops on the Central front have captured the Rzhev airport and cut an important road linking two German places, the British radio said today in a broadcast heard by CBS.

BULLETIN
MOSCOW, Aug. 29—In one of the bloodiest battles of all history, Soviet forces today furiously counter attacked northwest of Stalingrad to drive back Nazi tanks and troops which had penetrated defense lines in depth.

Mounds of dead littered the battlefield as the Nazis strove to press forward regardless of casualties, but the Russians were equal to every question asked of them.

Ever increasing German hordes poured across the Don to reinforce depleted divisions. The great battle is being fought on flat table land between the Don and the Volga, and the lack of natural defenses accounts for the heavy casualties on both sides.

Batter at Rzhev

Meanwhile, the Russians continued battering at the gates of Rzhev, pivotal city on the Central front some 135 miles west and north of Moscow, and there were reports of a growing Soviet offensive on the Leningrad front.

Nazi dive-bombers continued their systematic block-by-block assaults on the city of Stalin, seeking to destroy the Volga metropolis methodically, after a pre-arranged pattern.

But the civilian population has been standing up admirably under this terrific pounding and there is every indication that it will continue to do so.

Soviet forces southwest of Stalingrad beat off numerous German attacks from the direction of Kotelnikovo.

HUSKIE LOSES FORTUNE; JUST A DOG AGAIN

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 29—Huskie, a black terrier, owner of a house and an automobile until yesterday, was just a dog again today.

Superior Court Judge Newcomb Condee ruled that two wills under which the dog was left the property by his mistress, the late Maggie Mae White, were not properly executed and could not be admitted to probate.

Mrs. White had directed that Huskie have one house to live in and the rent from another, that he be taken for rides in the automobile and fed good food, including a chicken dinner once a week.

Under the court's ruling her $25,000 estate will be divided among heirs.

PRESIDENT TO MAKE FIGHTING TALK MONDAY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—Washington and the nation today awaited the first of three speeches by President Roosevelt which will outline the White House plans to solidify America's war effort and combat inflation by controlling wages and farm prices.

Mr. Roosevelt was working over the draft of the first speech, to be delivered Monday at the dedication of the new naval hospital at nearby Bethesda, Md. Then, on September 3, he will address the International Student Service meeting in Washington, and on Labor Day send a special anti-inflation message to Congress and make a fire-side chat the same night which will climax one of the busiest speech-making weeks the White House has ever known outside of a national political campaign.

Both the Army and Navy have been instructed to see that the President's speech Monday is short-waved to American soldiers and sailors throughout the world. It is expected to be a "fighting address," according to sources close to the White House. The President is expected to call on the nation to make sacrifices to support the war effort in order to produce munitions for American forces on fighting fronts throughout the world.

MEDIA, Pa., Aug. 29—Sentence was deferred today pending action by a draft board on two men who admitted they wooed a pretty nurse so they could rob her of $63.

Clarence Lawrence, 35, said he met the nurse, Betty Heyniger, in a media nursing home where he was also employed. He told Charles F. Moyer, 21, of Chester, the girl "sometimes has a lot of money on her" and the pair decided to rob her.

"Lawrence took the girl out," Moyer told the court. "I hid in the bushes. I had a toy pistol and took her money."

BLOODIEST FIGHT OF WAR ROARS AT STALINGRAD

Mounds Of Dead Litter Field As Germans Disregard Cost Of Battle

Force Of 600 Planes Bombs Plants Feeding Hitler's War Machine

NEW YORK, Aug. 29—Hard-fighting Soviet troops on the Central front have captured the Rzhev airport and cut an important road linking two German places, the British radio said today in a broadcast heard by CBS.

MOSCOW, Aug. 29—In one of the bloodiest battles of all history, Soviet forces today furiously counter attacked northwest of Stalingrad to drive back Nazi tanks and troops which had penetrated defense lines in depth.

Mounds of dead littered the battlefield as the Nazis strove to press forward regardless of casualties, but the Russians were equal to every question asked of them.

Ever increasing German hordes poured across the Don to reinforce depleted divisions. The great battle is being fought on flat table land between the Don and the Volga, and the lack of natural defenses accounts for the heavy casualties on both sides.

Batter at Rzhev

Meanwhile, the Russians continued battering at the gates of Rzhev, pivotal city on the Central front some 135 miles west and north of Moscow, and there were reports of a growing Soviet offensive on the Leningrad front.

Nazi dive-bombers continued their systematic block-by-block assaults on the city of Stalin, seeking to destroy the Volga metropolis methodically, after a pre-arranged pattern.

But the civilian population has been standing up admirably to this terroristic pounding and there is every indication that it will continue to do so.

Soviet forces southwest of Stalingrad beat off numerous German attacks from the direction of Kotelnikovo.

Britain's air offensive against the Reich mounted to a devastating crescendo today as the RAF left two more industrial towns in smoking ruins.

For the second successive night a force of at least 600 heavily laden bombers poured incendiaries and high explosives on industrial plants feeding Hitler's war machine.

Saarbruecken, on the French border 300 miles from London, and Nuremberg, 200 miles to the East, were the targets of the night raid that followed a day of continuous bombardment of the French coastal area.

HUSKIE LOSES FORTUNE; JUST A DOG AGAIN

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 29—Huskie, a black terrier, owner of a house and an automobile until yesterday, was just a dog again today.

Superior Court Judge Newcomb Condee ruled that two wells under which the dog was left the property by his mistress, the late Maggie Mae White, were not properly executed and could not be admitted to probate.

Mrs. White had directed that Huskie have one house to live in and the rent from another, that he be taken for rides in the automobile and fed good food, including a chicken dinner once a week.

Under the court's ruling her $25,000 estate will be divided among heirs.

Jacob Seeks God's Help

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL
(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for August 30 is Genesis 31-33, the Golden Text being Psalm 46-1, "God is our refuge and strength, A very present help in trouble.")

JACOB LIVED with Laban, his mother's brother, for 20 years and prospered, although Laban had not always treated him well. He had married Leah, Laban's older daughter, and Rachel, the younger, for whom he had labored seven years. His marriage to Leah had been made by Laban through trickery. Leah had borne him several sons, however, and Rachel had one son, Joseph.

Now Jacob saw that Laban no longer looked upon him with friendship, and decided he had better leave. In a dream the Lord appeared to him and told him to go back to his old home, so he gathered his wives and children, servants and flocks and started. Unknown to him, however, Rachel stole the images or good luck charms from her father's house and took them with her.

Laban found out that his images had been stolen, and thinking Jacob had done it he started in pursuit. He overtook Jacob on the seventh day, in the mount of Gilead, but during the night Laban had a dream wherein the Lord appeared to him and told him to do no harm to Jacob. Laban accused Jacob of stealing the images and Jacob told him to search for them and to put to death whomsoever he found had them.

Everywhere Laban searched, but Rachel had them hidden in the furniture of the camel she rode, and when her father came to search she sat on them and told him she could not rise to salute him as she was not well.

Asks for Covenant
Laban then asked Jacob to make a covenant with him, and Jacob had his servants pile up stones and Laban said, "This heap is a witness between me and thee this day." They called the place Mizpah, meaning watchtower, for Laban said, "The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another."

The two men still did not trust each other, yet, early the next morning Laban kissed his daughters, and their children, blessed them and departed.

Jacob went on his way, then, but he had another to face, the man whom he had wronged 20 years before—his brother Esau. He was deathly afraid of Esau, and he sent messengers before him to tell Esau he was coming and had great riches, hoping to find favor in his brother's sight.

The messengers brought word that Esau was coming to meet him, and with him were 400 armed men. This terrified Jacob still more, and he divided his flocks so that if Esau seized one group the others might escape.

Jacob prayed to God to protect him, saying, "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth which Thou hast showed unto Thy servant; for with my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands. Deliver me, I pray Thee, from the hand of my brother, and from the hand of Esau; for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother with the children."

Offers Princely Gift

He then prepared a princely gift for his brother of goats, sheep, camels and horses, and told his servants to go ahead and present them to Esau. That night Jacob took his wives and children and passed over the ford Jabbok. That left him alone, and all that night he wrestled with a man and could not overthrow him, and the man touched Jacob's thigh with his hand and threw it out of joint, so that he was helpless. Nevertheless, as the day broke Jacob would not let the man go, and the man said, "Let me go," but Jacob answered, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me."

"And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob. And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God, and with men, and hast prevailed." And he blessed Jacob, but would not tell his name. Jacob called this place Peniel, "for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved," he said.

When Jacob saw his brother coming next morning, he put his female servants and their children in front, and his wives and children last, last of all being Rachel and Joseph. Jacob passed them and bowed himself to the ground seven times before Esau, but Esau ran to meet him, embraced him, fell on his neck and kissed him and both wept. Jacob's family was then introduced and Esau asked Jacob and his family to his home, but Jacob went another way and set up a home for himself near the city of Shelem.

Esau had at first refused the gift Jacob offered him, saying he was rich and didn't need it, but Jacob prevailed upon him to take it.

It is hard for us to accept Jacob as a good man. He was a trickster, a liar, and a coward, and Esau appears to us to be the better man. But Jacob had some courage and great determination.

Jacob Seeks God's Help

After living 20 years with Laban, his uncle, and growing rich, marrying Leah and Rachel, Laban's daughters, Laban was angry and envious of Jacob, so the latter set his wives and children on camels and started back to his own land with all his possessions.

More Volunteers Needed For OCD Warden Service

More volunteers are needed for air raid warden and fire watcher service in all parts of the city. These are among the really important jobs connected with local Civilian Defense, but department heads report extreme difficulty in obtaining volunteers for the duty.

No part of the city can hope to cope with a serious war emergency unless it has both air raid wardens and fire watchers. The wardens are the contact men with the general contact center and only from them can calls for emergency service be recognized. They patrol their districts in time of emergency, report fires, casualties and other conditions growing out of the emergency.

Fire watchers assist in fighting home fires. Both the fire watchers and air raid wardens instruct citizens in fighting incendiary bombs.

Farming in Southern Ohio

By THOMAS E. BEERY

Bee Pasture

Folks who are keeping some bees would like to see many blooming plants for them during the Fall, and we may have them. A friend who has had some experience with bees says that if we have plenty of Golden rod that it is excellent bee pasture; but have you noticed how little there is of this, since mowing of permanent pastures has become an approved farm practice? Mowing helps control the weeds in a pasture, tends to thicken the stand, and to increase the yield, but it also reduces the number of blooming plants that formerly provided much bee pasture. Of course many fields will not be mowed, and we will have a lot of steel weed blossom, or Fall aster, as it is commonly known, that will be of value to the bees. It would be a good plan to continue looking at the supers, about every two weeks during the Fall, for we may yet have a surplus of honey for the colony, and some in the supers for the owner.

A Corn Field Clean Near The Road

I just passed a corn field in Fayette county that was clean near the road, but if you looked closely, you could see that farther back, there was still a lot of hoeing to do. I liked the way this man planned his work for those who pass his field will get some pleasure from seeing the improvement he is making in its appearance, long before he is through hoeing out some large weeds.

A Very Hot Job

"I'm doing a very hot job hoeing the few remaining vines out of my corn, but I think I will be well repaid" a very good southern Ohio farmer just told me. "I know it is late in the year to be fighting vines, and some farmers will tell you that they won't do much damage to corn from now on, but I don't think so; weeds and vines will damage the crop until it is made", he continued. Is he right about this?

Clean Roadsides

You see a lot of them in southern Ohio, even along the county roads, for in many counties there is a superintendent of construction who sees that this work is done, before weed seeds have time to ripen. Controlling weeds is enough reason for mowing the roads, but the big thing accomplished is making them safer for travel. Did you ever slip off of a road and into weeds, that made it impossible for you to see obstructions? I did that once, and I had rough riding for awhile, bumping over low stumps, well hidden in the grass and weeds. I sometimes think that there should be no obstruction of any kind along our main traveled roads. I know there is much to say for leaving beautiful trees but even they are a hazard to travel.

Fall Color

You see some color on vegetation this early in the Fall. The black haw has a pink tint on the leaves, the sweet gum is coloring in different shades of red, and even the corn fields are turning a lighter shade of green than they were a few weeks ago.

The golden yellow color on the tobacco crop is showing up at many farm homes, too.

It won't be long now until we will have a riot of color on the landscape, as someone has well expressed it. Some folks think that the foliage changes in the Fall are caused by light frosts, but botanists tell us that it is the accumulation of different kinds of minerals in the leaves that causes them, and that we get some of the prettiest colors before we have

SECOND CARLOAD OF SCRAP ON WAY TO AXIS

Second carload of scrap rubber to be sent out of Circleville this Summer in the state salvage program has been dispatched to collection centers. The carload included 36,000 pounds of scrap rubber.

The first carload had 39,000 pounds of rubber in it.

Dan McClain, salvage committee chief, said Saturday that the Sinclair company has 20,000 pounds of rubber on hand which has not yet been shipped, and he understands that some other companies throughout the county have supplies not yet shipped.

Farm Trailers

Have you noticed how many more farm trailers we have now than we had a few years ago? Four wheel trailers, like two we recently saw hitched together behind a tractor, near Washington C. H., and loaded with sweet corn, is a rather common sight. You see a lot of them in the corn belt.

Trailers large enough to haul hogs, and even mature cows and horses are common on the highways now. I sold some hogs this week and the two men who bought both came for them in low trailers.

"Do you think you can get those 'stockers' into that trailer?" I said to Clarence Patton, the first man who called.

"I think I can," he said, "if I get everything ready and load them the first time I try to do it. You have the hogs shut up and they'll want to get out and I plan to have the trailer against the door, so they can all go out together," he explained.

I was dubious about his plan working, but it worked. The second man who bought some brood sows used the same plan and it worked 100 percent as he expressed it, even though the hogs had to jump up about fifteen inches to get into the trailer.

Unusual Companions

We just passed some unusual companions, standing close together near Washington C. H., Ohio—a large draft team and a buck. They seemed to be the best of friends.

A cat and dog at our home are unusual companions, too, and sometimes the dog will stand back and let the cat drink milk from his tin cup. They walk around leisurely together, at times, but sometimes they fight like cats and dogs are expected to do. Even these disagreements just seem to strengthen their friendship. They hunt together, some too, and that is unusual.

An Unusual Yard Fence

We just passed an unusual yard fence in northern Fayette county, made from large red granite boulders set neatly in concrete. It is hard to realize it, but these boulders are stone transported by glaciers from somewhere in the East—probably New Hampshire or Vermont, where they are in place, as a geologist would express it. Haven't we had some great changes in Ohio at some time in the distant past?

You see these boulders are used in many ways but this is the first time we ever saw them used as an ornamental fence in front of a home. They made a permanent fence, too. If a good grade of concrete has been used that fence will last for centuries, and will need little if any repairs.

More Volunteers Needed For OCD Warden Service

More volunteers are needed for air raid warden and fire watcher service in all parts of the city. These are among the really important jobs connected with local Civilian Defense, but department heads report extreme difficulty in obtaining volunteers for the duty.

No part of the city can hope to cope with a serious war emergency unless it has both air raid wardens and fire watchers. The wardens are the contact men with the general control center and only from them can calls for emergency service be recognized. They patrol their districts in time of emergency, report fires, casualties and other conditions growing out of the emergency.

Fire watchers assist in fighting home fires. Both the fire wardens and air raid wardens instruct citizens in fighting incendiary bombs.

CENTER OF THINGS

ALL roads seem to lead to Washington now. At least for "people who matter," whether their homes are in this country or in the remote antipodes. Among the latest arrivals have been the prime ministers of South Africa and Australia the latter almost directly "down under." And all such guests, as they come in an endless and growing procession, are welcomed and fitted somehow into the vast structure of friendship, cooperation and defense. Washington is the center of financial and political power, at least, so far as the Allied Nations are concerned. It is also the chief dispenser of help for the free powers and hope for free-souled men everywhere.

People back home, though, wonder a little now and then as to the complete adequacy of the national capital in this capacity. With all the politics and bureaucracy and dog-eat-dog rivalry that seem so prevalent there, can Washington really represent the Spirit of America? It might be better if all such visitors who come to the center of this New World for help and hope could take a turn around this country and meet the people of the various sections and classes, and see the great war factories, and get down to the nation's grass-roots.

Washington is the national switchboard. It can press buttons and turn on power. But it is not America.

ADOLF'S BLUNDER

ELABORATE reasons are given by war commentators to explain why the All-Highest Hitler invited the hostility of Brazil, by his reckless assaults on Brazilian ships and lives.

Guessers say that he wanted to frighten the Brazilians into inaction, to deprive the United States and other Allies of Brazilian imports, to teach Latin-America not to meddle in the war, and so on.

It may easily have been a snake-and-rabbit act, to scare the victim stiff. But if so, the snake certainly failed to charm that rabbit. Instead, Hitler merely aroused the self-respecting indignation of all the Latin-American nations to a higher pitch and unified the western hemisphere against him. Thus unwittingly he performed a great service for the free men of this new world and hastened his own downfall.

Sooner or later even a conquering Caesar or Napoleon makes a fatal mistake. This may have been such a case.

Who says women have no sense of humor, when they call themselves Waacs and Waves?

'ROUND CIRCLEVILLE . . . Hour by Hour

Pages From the Diary of An Antiquated Reporter:

Out and about the ville on another glorious morning. Every-one moving with snap, and the first business tale I heard was of pickup. Chatted with Bud Harden, whose arm and hand have just resumed normal proportions after attack by a bumbee. Harry Hill told me of stirring up a nest of yellow-jackets in his yard and said they are the first he has seen for many years. Had just started wondering whether or not they are extinct.

Bob Bremer was using a scythe at his greenhouse, and in the grass near him cavorted a pair of half grown cats. A bumbee nest was disturbed and one of the cats thought bating the bees around was great fun. Then one of the bumblebees sat down on the kitten's nose and the fun ended right there for the cat and began for Bob. "Never saw an animal perform so many antics as that one did," the florist said.

John Keller was carrying two interesting pictures. One was of his daughter, a horse and a threshing machine engine, all 27 years old. And the other of John and Charlie Ward. That pair just completed the thirty-second year of threshing service together.

Some of the fishermen hereabouts are just not playing their parts in this war. The conservation department has issued a bulletin calling attention to the fact that every pound of fish caught saves just that much beef, mutton, pork or poultry. And some of these fishermen have not caught a thing in weeks. Me included. Soon the hunters will lift some of the responsibility.

That woman who put a penny in an envelope and dropped it at a cross roads, following advice given by a friend that cockroaches she was fighting would leave her home and go to the home of the finder, has lost all confidence. Certainly, someone has found the envelope by this time and she has just as many roaches as before. Maybe more.

Met Carl Hunter and was his guest at the coffee bar. Chatted with Elmon Richards, back from his first vacation in seven years. Caught some nice fish, was seasick on one occasion, and had a grand time generally. Greatly impressed by the Northern Michigan peninsula. And who wouldn't be.

Saw Ted Lewis on the street and thanked him for his fine entertainment on the West coast of one of this paper's former employees, Red Hughes. Ted showed that youngster the time of his life. Came a postcard from Jim Shea, who is in the army classification department at Fort Ben, over Indianapolis way. Says he is working hard. Hopes to catch a ride home come Saturday. And another card from Joe Burns, who was attending a special gem school in Cleveland. Says he understands his watchmaker didn't find even a little fish in my timepiece when he cleaned it after Earl Smith dunked me in Wayne lake.

No one, probably, ever saw a larger sunflower than the one growing at the home of Sally Lynch, West Mound street. Refuse to give its height, for no one would believe. However, it does bear 35 full-blown flowers, and a lot more are coming on. The thing looks like a tree.

LACK OF FULL UNDERSTANDING

WASHINGTON — Standing out against some of the discouraging developments of the war is one very encouraging factor — the improved co-operation between the navies of Great Britain and the United States.

Naval and military cooperation always is difficult between Allies. Different customs, different training, sometimes different languages make teamwork almost impossible at the start of any war. And it takes real statesmanship—military, naval and political — to improve it.

To illustrate, cooperation between the United States, Britain and the Dutch touched bottom during the battles around the Dutch East Indies. Since then tremendous improvements have been made; but at that time the United Nations hurriedly had thrown together what ships Admiral Tommy Hart had in the Philippines; together with what the British had left after losing the Prince of Wales and the Repulse off Singapore; and finally the very small fleet the Dutch could muster around Java and Sumatra.

Admiral Hart, then past retirement age, but with a good fighting record, was placed in command of the United Fleet, and in the Battle of Macassar Straits managed to sink a large number of Jap transports.

After this action, Hart's scouts saw approaching a much larger Japanese fleet, including what appeared to be 8-inch gun cruisers, guarding a great convoy.

Hart's own fleet was inferior. So he faced one of the vital decisions of war: whether to save his fleet or give battle then. To give battle meant possible annihilation, but also it meant the possibility of knocking out most or even all of this Jap fleet.

Admiral Hart took the first alternative and retired. Subsequently, the Dutch were critical of Hart. The Japs made a landing close to Java, subsequently pushed on to Java, and the Dutch felt that the Allied fleet should have risked battle. By so doing, they thought, Java might have been saved.

"THE COMMANDER ERRED"

Whether Admiral Hart erred or not, only history can tell. But apparently he had made some other errors. For Hart himself, who is a refreshingly candid old sea-dog, several times wrote in his log: "The Commander (referring to himself) now finds that he was mistaken" about this and thus.

He had, for instance, sent the fleet scurrying off toward Sumatra, figuring the Japs would strike there; then east again to Java; and wasted so much time on these maneuvers that the Japs were able to reinforce their fleet. Also, Gen. Wavell was so busy reinforcing Singapore, and used so many British warships for convoy work that Hart was handicapped by lessened British naval support.

All of these things combined caused the Dutch to voice vigorous protests to Washington, and Admiral Hart was transferred — "for reasons of health." He was replaced

Amazing Triumph Over Diphtheria

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

IF ANYONE had told me 40 years ago that at the end of that time diphtheria would be wiped out in this country by an effort of medical science, I would have refused to believe a word of it. And if I had been further told that this was to be due to the willing cooperation of parents and children for individual vaccination by doctors, boards of health and school doctors, I would have been even more incredulous.

Dr. Clending will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

In looking back and thinking this over, I do not know whether to wonder at and admire more the scientific accomplishment or the fact that the public was persuaded to take advantage of it.

The scientific accomplishment is awe inspiring enough. To have taken a disease—one of the most fatal and treacherous of all human dangers, which has killed off the babies and children and youth of the world for thousands of years, for we have records of it since mankind first squatted on the banks of the Nile—and to perfect a method, itself perfectly harmless, by which the introduction of a few drops of fluid under the skin will render an infant protected from the disease for life—that indicates for me the highest form of accomplishment of the human mind.

Education of Public But when I reflect back and remember all the cranks who were against "serum" and the anti-vaccinationists of 1902, and consider that by reasonable and gentle persuasion, state boards of health have convinced parents so that in some states 100 per cent of children entering school have had diphtheria prevention, I am not so sure but what that is the greater triumph.

People will swallow any kind of a witch's brew made in a dark back kitchen by an ignorant quack who has never tested it on a single case for this, that, or the other ailment, but will shy away from a product that has been the careful and patient and tested accomplishment of the most exact laboratories because it is a "serum." I still get some letters from representatives of the dinosaurs protesting against my advocacy of diphtheria, smallpox and typhoid vaccination, but even in my short career in medical journalism they are getting fewer and farther between.

Success of Campaigns

At any rate there is no question of the accomplishment. In some states the campaign has been so thoroughly carried out that the citizens hardly know what diphtheria is.

In my neighboring city of Kansas City, Kansas, in one of those enlightened states, there have been no deaths from diphtheria for three years. Think of that in a city of two hundred thousand population. In Massachusetts, a state where there is much population crowding, with tenements and poverty, the actual rate of incidence of diphtheria had dropped in the 10 years between 1930 and 1940 from 101 cases per 100,000 population to 3.

But remember, diphtheria is not killed; it is only sleeping. Eternal vigilance—continued vaccination—is the price of peace.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

D. M. T.:—Is scabies contagious? If so, how long after being exposed do first symptoms appear, and what is the usual length of time one has this itch?

Answer: Scabies is an infection of the skin by a microscopic spider-like insect. It is contagious—very. Symptoms appear as soon as the insect has burrowed into the skin of his new location—a few hours. The itch lasts forever unless you apply some sulphur ointment to kill off the invaders.

CHAPTER TWENTY

BARBARA allowed Tony and Pamela to persuade her that she was the only one to stage the carnival.

"Then it's all settled," Pamela looked at her wristwatch and jumped to her feet. "I'll have to dash. I drove Tony over so I'll have to drive him back. . . . I'll tell Mother to expect you at three tomorrow. . . . By the way, what sort of a costume do you think we ought to dream up for Tony, Barbara?"

Barbara considered him thoughtfully, thinking how admirably his shabby tweeds suited him. "Well," she said, "wouldn't it depend on what his girl is wearing? You see, a monk and a ballet dancer, or a clown and a queen, would be too incongruous if you're going to have prizes."

"I told you she was good!" Pamela said.

"Let me know then when you've decided what you are going to wear," Tony said.

Pamela's eyes flashed to his instantly, and she saw that he had spoken to Barbara.

And she saw the way their glances were locked and the faint color that surprised had sent to Barbara's cheek, and the same faint color that sprang from Tony's knowledge of what he had said.

If she had been four years younger, she would have given way to the tears of disappointment that made a lump in her throat. But she was 18, and already a woman of the world, so she said coolly, "Then I think you'd better plan on the Cossack costume I first suggested, Tony. You're to be my beau that night, you know."

"You'd make a perfect Cossack, Tony," Barbara said. "And whatever Pamela wears is sure to be charming. What is it to be, Pam?"

"That's going to be a surprise. The whole evening will be full of surprises. Wait and see!"

The strum of guitars was louder and the beat of a haunting melody had begun beside a gypsy campfire long ago in some distant land grew faster, wilder, and its cry rose to the sky that was like a star-studded bowl of lapis lazuli overturned upon a fairland.

A girl in purple velvet stood on the crest of a hill between another hill topped with the lighted mansion that was Stormwood and the brightly lighted pond below where a gypsy orchestra in a giant gilt shell played that wild, stirring music. She was silently drinking in the sight of beauty that she and the night between them had created.

Above and around her, all over the woodland that was the Kileran estate, colored lights strung in the trees winked and blinked like myriads of giant fireflies and made dancing shadows of the silhouettes of great, lacy trees upon the carpet of light snow that covered the ground.

To her right, the mansion was ablaze with lights that shone from every window as the east golden beams cut into the shrubbery and reached to the drive where gleaming motors stood in double rows. The lights of a car turning into the gates below the long drive sent an arc of light to halo the hill as it approached. From these things, Barbara Wister turned her glance to the more enchanting scene below her.

Here, a circle of brush fires, attended by men in peasant costumes, made a flaming frame for the big pond that looked like an animated picture out of a 17th century story-book. Torches of red and white fire threw giant shadows on the white hillside and made the colors of the skaters' costumes as clear as if the night were day.

From where she stood, Barbara singled out the costumes, the clowns and mandarins, the Mickey Mouse and polar bear, the inevitable pierrettes and their harlequins. And then, as startling as an exclamation point, the girl like a tall doll dressed all in white from tips of her skating boots to the top of her white fur shako, the girl in short white skirt with a wide band of fox. That would be Pamela. And step by step with her was the tall figure in a Cossack costume, Tony. "Pamela was right. You're a perfect Cossack," she'd said to him when she first saw him in costume, but he'd scarcely been listening for looking, saying, "I'd like to paint you in that costume, Barbara."

That had been nice of him. She had no illusions about her simple costume. She'd made it herself and it consisted of no more than a full gathered skirt with a warm basque blouse that buttoned tightly to where her little bonnet was tied with blue ribbons. The bonnet she'd faced with pansies from an old hat and thought it much too young and coy. The whole thing had been concocted out of purple velvet curtains she'd found in the attic.

She hadn't wanted to wear a costume, protesting to Pamela that she was only part of the hired help, a protest that was founded on Claire's cool behavior. But Pamela had insisted, pointing out that she would be less conspicuous than if she wore ordinary dress. "Even the skating waiters are to be in costume," Pamela had added, and further added, "Besides, you won't be working all evening. I want you to join us and have a good time. Mother's having slews of extra men and we'll snag a beau for you. So get your work done early."

Now the work was done. Before noon, when the train had brought the house guests, everything was in order. The paint was dry on the big shell where the orchestra sat, the hot drink bar had been set up in the portable log cabin; the fires had been ready to light, the costumes the help fitted, the lights strung and tested and the entertainers—the comedy team and the professional skaters—given dressing rooms. The musicians and the caterers, having once been engaged, were no longer her responsibility.

There was nothing more for her to do in the big house. A regiment of caterers' assistants were preparing the buffet supper and the Cuban orchestra was playing in the drawing room, where Claire Kilcrann, in a gown more resplendent than Barbara had ever seen, held court, and where those who did not wish to enter into the outdoor activities were dancing to rumba music.

Standing alone on the hillside, Barbara heard laughter that rose above the music and it made her feel as lonely as if she had been a star in the cold heavens, looking down upon the scene.

"Only, if I were," she thought, "I should have the company of other stars."

There was nothing to keep her from going down to join that laughter on the pond. Pamela had urged her to, saying, "You will have almost the whole evening free. Bring your skates and join us as soon as you can." She'd said that only a few hours earlier when she was leaving the house with Tony at her side.

She saw Tony now, picking out his tall figure easily. He stood alone, close to one of the burning brush fires. But, even as she watched, he was no longer alone. Pamela, looking like a big doll, came out of the shadows and the two figures drew together and glided off into the maze of skaters.

"He wouldn't know if I were there," she said half aloud.

If she were to go down there, would he come to her and put his strong young arm around her as it now was around the slender waist of Pamela? The unbidden question was disturbing; it opened gates of memory, and the tide of other thoughts pushed through them. A swift surge of longing, a longing for things she didn't put into words, swept over her. Widow and mother she was, but telling herself this was not enough to quell the desires that made her conscious of her hunger for life, for love, for gaiety. She was young, she was a woman and she was alone, completely, forlornly alone.

will benefit through elderly women relatives and friends. You should avoid extravagance and excess in diet. A clear, quick-thinking brain will be evinced by the child who is born on this date. Such a child will be thoughtful, intuitive, painstaking, independent, and fond of beauty, but have a rather erratic temper.

Hints on Etiquette

Be a good listener when others talk. Not only listen to what is being said, show your interest by comments and ask questions if you possibly can. At any rate, follow the speaker with enthusiasm.

For Saturday, August 29

THE EMPHASIS seems to be on a day of enjoyment, pleasure-seeking and romance, attended by domestic, social and cultural celebrations, in which the appeal to beauty, art, music and the emotional urges of life are uppermost. However, there are possibilities for good and practical work should the energies and ambitions be turned in that direction.

Those whose birthday it is might have a year of definite progress and success, with firm foundations secured by practical and constructive efforts centered on such objectives. But the accent is placed on the higher and more alluring and enjoyable aspirations in life, with love, romance, social and domestic functions to the fore. Beauty, art grace and charm seek fulfillment and pleasure while various forms of self-indulgence may be carried to excess, to be attended by regrettable reactions.

A child born on this day should have much practical ability, skill and energy, with expansive ideas and aims, but its real aspirations will be centered on art, beauty, culture, romance and social activities, in which it may shine.

For Sunday, August 30

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds auguries for an eventful and intriguing day in which there should be a wide diversity of interests and functions. There may be unforeseen change, travel or new experience or adventure, in which there may be pleasure, honors and personal gratification. Also there are strange and unorthodox or subtle lures calling for integrity, honesty, and good common sense, lest there be pitfalls, regrets and disappointments. Stay true to principle.

Those whose birthday it is may be confronted by a year of diverse and strange adventures and romantic experiences, in which there may be subtle, intriguing as well as worthy opportunities for progress and good fortune, albeit openings to test integrity, sound principles and fidelity to duty, convention and reality.

A child born on this day should be ambitious, energetic, original and versatile, and eventually successful, despite lures to be subtle, intriguing and expedient with ideals and emotional urges swerving from accepted and practical tenets.

CENTER OF THINGS

ALL roads seem to lead to Washington now. At least for "people who matter," whether their homes are in this country or in the remote antipodes. Among the latest arrivals have been the prime ministers of South Africa and Australia the latter almost directly "down under." And all such guests, as they come in an endless and growing procession, are welcomed and fitted somehow into the vast structure of friendship, cooperation and defense. Washington is the center of financial and political power, at least, so far as the Allied Nations are concerned. It is also the chief dispenser of help for the free powers and hope for free-souled men everywhere.

People back home, though, wonder a little now and then as to the complete adequacy of the national capital in this capacity. With all the politics and bureaucracy and dog-eat-dog rivalry that seem so prevalent there, can Washington really represent the Spirit of America? It might be better if all such visitors who come to the center of this New World for help and hope could take a turn around this country and meet the people of the various sections and classes, and see the great war factories, and get down to the nation's grass-roots.

Washington is the national switchboard. It can press buttons and turn on power. But it is not America.

ADOLF'S BLUNDER

ELABORATE reasons are given by war commentators to explain why the All-Highest Hitler invited the hostility of Brazil, by his reckless assaults on Brazilian ships and lives.

Guessers say that he wanted to frighten the Brazilians into inaction, to deprive the United States and other Allies of Brazilian imports, to teach Latin-America not to meddle in the war, and so on.

It may easily have been a snake-and-rabbit act, to scare the victim stiff. But if so, the snake certainly failed to charm that rabbit. Instead, Hitler merely aroused the self-respecting indignation of all the Latin-American nations to a higher pitch and unified the western hemisphere against him. Thus unwittingly he performed a great service for the free men of this new world and hastened his own downfall.

Sooner or later even a conquering Caesar or Napoleon makes a fatal mistake. This may have been such a case.

Daily Washington Merry-Go-Round

By DREW PEARSON

LACK OF FULL UNDERSTANDING

WASHINGTON — Standing out against some of the discouraging developments of the war is one very encouraging factor — the improved co-operation between the navies of Great Britain and the United States.

Naval and military cooperation always is difficult between Allies. Different customs, different training, sometimes different languages make teamwork almost impossible at the start of any war. And it takes real statesmanship—military, naval and political — to improve it.

To illustrate, cooperation between the United States, Britain and the Dutch touched bottom during the battles around the Dutch East Indies. Since then tremendous improvements have been made; but at that time the United Nations hurriedly had thrown together what ships Admiral Tommy Hart had in the Philippines; together with what the British had left after losing the Prince of Wales and the Repulse off Singapore; and finally the very small fleet the Dutch could muster around Java and Sumatra.

Admiral Hart, then past retirement age, but with a good fighting record, was placed in command of the United Fleet, and in the Battle of Macassar Straits managed to sink a large number of Jap transports.

After this action, Hart's scouts saw approaching a much larger Japanese fleet, including what appeared to be 8-inch gun cruisers, guarding a great convoy.

Hart's own fleet was inferior. So he faced one of the vital decisions of war: whether to save his fleet or give battle then. To give battle meant possible annihilation, but also it meant the possibility of knocking out most or even all of this Jap fleet.

Admiral Hart took the first alternative and retired. Subsequently, the Dutch were critical of Hart. The Japs made a landing close to Java, subsequently pushed on to Java, and the Dutch felt that the Allied fleet should have risked battle. By so doing, they thought, Java might have been saved.

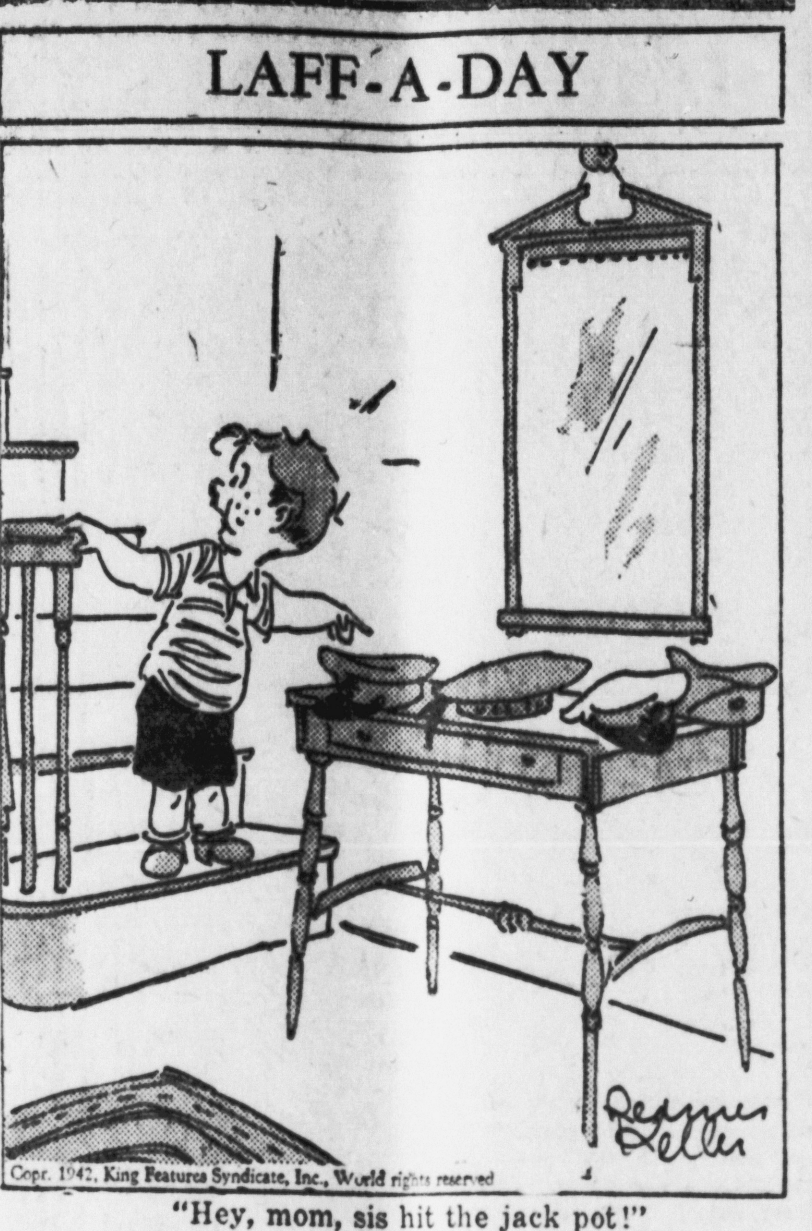

"THE COMMANDER ERRED"

Whether Admiral Hart erred or not, only history can tell. But apparently he had made some other errors. For Hart himself, who is a refreshingly candid old sea-dog, several times wrote in his log: "The Commander (referring to himself) now finds that he was mistaken" about thus and thus.

He had, for instance, sent the fleet scurrying off toward Sumatra, figuring the Japs would strike there; then east again to Java; and wasted so much time on these maneuvers that the Japs were able to reinforce their fleet. Also, Gen. Wavell was so busy reinforcing Singapore, and used so many British warships for convoy work that Hart was handicapped by lessened British naval support.

All of these things combined caused the Dutch to voice vigorous protests to Washington, and Admiral Hart was transferred — "for reasons of health". He was replaced

Amazing Triumph Over Diphtheria

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

IF ANYONE had told me 40 years ago that at the end of that time diphtheria would be wiped out in this country by an effort of medical science, I would have refused to believe a word of it. And if I had been further told that this was to be due to the willing cooperation of parents and children for individual vaccination by doctors, boards of health and school doctors, I would have been even more incredulous.

In looking back and thinking this over, I do not know whether to wonder at and admire more the scientific accomplishment or the fact that the public was persuaded to take advantage of it.

The scientific accomplishment is awe inspiring enough. To have taken a disease—one of the most fatal and treacherous of all human dangers, which has killed off the babies and children and youth of the world for thousands of years, for we have records of it since mankind first squatted on the banks of the Nile—and to perfect a method, itself perfectly harmless, by which the introduction of a few drops of fluid under the skin will render an infant protected from the disease for life—that indicates for me the highest form of accomplishment of the human mind.

Education of Public

But when I reflect back and remember all the cranks who were against "serum" and the anti-vaccinationists of 1902, and consider that by reasonable and gentle persuasion, state boards of health have convinced parents so that in some states 100 per cent of children entering school have had diphtheria prevention, I am not so sure but what that is the greater triumph.

People will swallow any kind of a witch's brew made in a dark back kitchen by an ignorant quack who has never tested it on a single case for this, that, or the other ailment, but will shy away from

CHAPTER TWENTY

BARBARA allowed Tony and Pamela to persuade her that she was the only one to stage the carnival.

"Then it's all settled," Pamela looked at her wristwatch and jumped to her feet. "I'll have to dash. I drove Tony over so I'll have to drive him back. . . . I'll tell Mother to expect you at three tomorrow. . . . By the way, what sort of a costume do you think we ought to dream up for Tony, Barbara?"

Barbara considered him thoughtfully, thinking how admirably his shabby tweeds suited him. "Well," she said, "wouldn't that depend on what his girl is wearing? You see, a monk and a ballet dancer, or a clown and a queen, would be too incongruous if you're going to have prizes."

"I told you she was good!" Pamela said.

"Let me know then when you've decided what you are going to wear," Tony said.

Pamela's eyes flashed to his instantly, and she saw that he had spoken to Barbara.

And she saw the way their glances were locked and the faint color that surprised had sent to Barbara's cheek, and the same faint color that sprang from Tony's knowledge of what he had said.

If she had been four years younger, she would have given way to the tears of disappointment that made a lump in her throat. But she was 18, and already a woman of the world, so she said coolly, "Then I think you'd better plan on the Cosack costume I first suggested, Tony. You're to be my beau that night, you know."

"You'd make a perfect Cosack, Tony," Barbara said. "And whatever Pamela wears is sure to be charming. What is it to be, Pam?"

"That's going to be a surprise. The whole evening will be full of surprises. Wait and see!"

The strum of guitars was louder and the beat of a haunting melody that had begun beside a gypsy campfire long ago in some distant land grew faster, wilder, and its cry rose to the sky that was like a star-studded bowl of lapis lazuli overturned upon a fairland.

A child born on this day should have much practical ability, skill and energy, with expansive ideas and aims, but its real aspirations will be centered on art, beauty, culture, romance and social activities, in which it may shine.

For Sunday, August 30

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds auguries for an eventful and intriguing day in which there should be a wide diversity of interests and functions. There may be unforeseen change, travel or new experience or adventure, in which there may be pleasure, honors and personal gratification. Also there are strange and unorthodox or subtle lures calling for integrity, honesty, and good common sense, lest there be pitfalls, regrets and disappointments. Stay true to principle.

Those whose birthday it is may be confronted by a year of diverse and strange adventures and romantic experiences, in which there may be subtle, intriguing as well as worthy opportunities for progress and good fortune, albeit openings to test integrity, sound principles and fidelity to duty, convention and reality.

A child born on this day should be ambitious, energetic, original and versatile, and eventually successful, despite lures to be subtle, intriguing and expedient, with ideals and emotional urges swerving from accepted and practical tenets.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

by the Dutch commander, Vice Admiral Conrad E. L. Helfrich.

THE BATTLE OF JAVA

Helfrich took command shortly before the disastrous battle of Java. Under him were Rear Admiral William A. Glassford, who had succeeded Hart; Rear Admiral Arthur Francis Palliser, in command of British units; and Rear Admiral Karel U. F. M. Doorman, the junior Dutch admiral who commanded at sea, Helfrich remaining in Surabaya.

A few hours before the battle of Java, Allied scouts sighted a superior Japanese fleet, and again the difficult question arose of deciding whether it was more advisable to engage or withdraw and await a more favorable opportunity.

However, there was complete unity and complete understanding when Admiral Doorman led the Dutch, American and British units into battle.

The battle started in the old-fashioned, approved naval style—two columns firing broadsides at each other. Admiral Doorman's flagship de Ruyter was in the vanguard, but being a six-inch gun cruiser it was outgunned by the enemy's 8-inch guns. So with typical Dutch courage, Doorman moved in closer, and signaled the rest of the column—British and American ships—to follow.

Doorman, it should be noted, was not accustomed to commanding a large number of naval units, the Dutch navy being very small. Ordinarily, other ships would not have followed Doorman, but since he signaled them to follow, they obeyed.

This brought H.M.S. Exeter and the U.S.S. Houston, together with other British and American units, within range of the enemy's 6-inch guns as well as its 8-inch guns.

ADMIRAL GLASSFORD STICKS
After the battle Admiral Helfrich held a post mortem with Admirals Glassford and Palliser. The latter announced he was withdrawing all British units immediately.

"But," remonstrated Admiral Helfrich, "your orders were to serve under me."
"My orders," replied the British commander, "are to serve under you until the situation becomes hopeless and then dispose of my ships according to my own judgment."

"And what do you propose to do, Admiral Glassford?" Helfrich asked.
"My orders are to serve under you until further combat is useless," the U. S. admiral replied. "I remain at your service."

"Then I order you to withdraw to Australian waters," Admiral Helfrich replied, recognizing that without British support further resistance was hopeless.

That sort of experience, however, is one of the things that may be encountered in any war, especially in its early stages. But United Nations teamwork is now vastly improved—though still not within the realm of perfection.

Note: Heroic Admiral Doorman has disappeared, perhaps drowned, or captured. His wife, however, waits hopefully in New York.

Tiger Coach About Set On Starting Backfield

Although many positions remain to be filled in the Circleville high school varsity machine, Coach Roy Black has given practicing spectators a look at what may be expected to be his backfield.

All week the squad has been working with Carl Bach at quarterback, Emmet Dade and Freck Heath at the halfback posts and Tom Shea at fullback. Shea played left half last year, but his weight has caused the mentor to consider shifting him.

From all indications the line will be light in weight. Dick Wells, who promises to be the spearhead of the forward wall, has been looking good at tackle. Bobby Valentine has been doing most of the centering.

Three boys expected to be contenders for first team jobs have not yet reported, all being employed at the present time. They are Dud Smallwood, who will likely play an end; Dave Orr, center, and Earl Wallace, tackle or guard.

Others who have been getting the coach's attention include Moore, Sowers, Jim Wells, Dunkle, Moats, guards; Moorehead center; Lutz, Nash, Haley, Wolf, tackles; Morgan, Mader, Barr, Young and J. Dade, ends; W. Leist, Shaw, Boggs, Pullen and Deming, backs.

No announcement has been made yet by school officials concerning the first opponent, Holy Rosary of Columbus having cancelled all its games this year.

Whether the Bears went into heavy employment of their T-formation was not clear to the 101-100 fans who paid $305.25 to see the ninth all-star attraction. Nor was it clear to those fans who were not even certain whether they were in the huge stadium.

The Army and Navy relief funds profited by $160,000.

The Bears thus have kept their record clear in their four appearances in the all-star game. In 1934 they inaugurated the games with a 0 to 0 tie; they won in 1935 5 to 0; last year 37 to 13, and last night.

The professionals did not strike with sufficient force to reach parity until the closing minutes of the first quarter and then Hugh Galliarne, former Stanford star, ripped through the collegians' line for nine yards and a touchdown. Joe Stydahar, who evidently will take over the point after touchdown kicks for the National league champions during the coming season, made a successful debut, converting all three attempts.

Pass for Second
The Bears employed one of their favorite weapons in scoring the second touchdown in the second period—the forward pass. The pass went from Young Bussey to Hampton Pool.

Hugh Galliarne again crossed the all-star goal line shortly after the third period started.

Steve Juzwik, former star of the University of Notre Dame, staged the most sensational play of the evening when he took a Bear kick on his own 10-yard line and with the aid of some well-timed blocking went to the Bears' six-yard line. The forward motion of the ball, insofar as the collegians were concerned, ended there for the Bears gave one of several demonstrations of their impregnable line.

CHICAGO BEARS SCORE 21 TO 0 WIN OVER STARS

$305,250 Put In Coffers By Crowd Attending Gridiron Classic

By H. C. Warren
SOLDIER FIELD, CHICAGO, Aug. 29—The Chicago Bears, champions of the National Football league, served notice today that their famous T-formation, with a man in motion is ready for the rigors of another season. The notice followed their 21 to 0 triumph over the college all-stars last night at Soldier field.

Whether the Bears went into heavy employment of their T-formation was not clear to the 101-100 fans who paid $305.25 to see the ninth all-star attraction. Nor was it clear to those fans who were not even certain whether they were in the huge stadium.

The Army and Navy relief funds profited by $160,000.

The Bears thus have kept their record clear in their four appearances in the all-star game. In 1934 they inaugurated the games with a 0 to 0 tie; they won in 1935 5 to 0; last year 37 to 13, and last night.

The professionals did not strike with sufficient force to reach parity until the closing minutes of the first quarter and then Hugh Galliarne, former Stanford star, ripped through the collegians' line for nine yards and a touchdown. Joe Stydahar, who evidently will take over the point after touchdown kicks for the National league champions during the coming season, made a successful debut, converting all three attempts.

Pass for Second
The Bears employed one of their favorite weapons in scoring the second touchdown in the second period—the forward pass. The pass went from Young Bussey to Hampton Pool.

Hugh Galliarne again crossed the all-star goal line shortly after the third period started.

Steve Juzwik, former star of the University of Notre Dame, staged the most sensational play of the evening when he took a Bear kick on his own 10-yard line and with the aid of some well-timed blocking went to the Bears' six-yard line. The forward motion of the ball, insofar as the collegians were concerned, ended there for the Bears gave one of several demonstrations of their impregnable line.

by the Dutch commander, Vice Admiral Conrad E. L. Helfrich.

THE BATTLE OF JAVA

Helfrich took command shortly before the disastrous battle of Java. Under him were Rear Admiral William A. Glassford, who had succeeded Hart; Rear Admiral Arthur Francis Palliser, in command of British units; and Rear Admiral Karel U. F. M. Doorman, the junior Dutch admiral who commanded at sea, Helfrich remaining in Surabaya.

A few hours before the battle of Java, Allied scouts sighted a superior Japanese fleet, and again the difficult question arose of deciding whether it was more advisable to engage or withdraw and await a more favorable opportunity.

However, there was complete unity and complete understanding when Admiral Doorman led the Dutch, American and British units into battle.

The battle started in the old-fashioned, approved naval style—two columns firing broadsides at each other. Admiral Doorman's flagship de Ruyter was in the vanguard, but being a six-inch gun cruiser it was outranged by the enemy's 8-inch guns. So with typical Dutch courage, Doorman moved in closer, and signaled the rest of the column—British and American ships—to follow.

Doorman, it should be noted, was not accustomed to commanding a large number of naval units, the Dutch navy being very small. Ordinarily, other ships would not have followed Doorman, but since he signaled them to follow, they obeyed.

This brought H.M.S. Exeter and the U.S.S. Houston, together with other British and American units, within range of the enemy's 6-inch guns as well as its 8-inch guns.

ADMIRAL GLASSFORD STICKS

After the battle Admiral Helfrich held a post mortem with Admirals Glassford and Palliser. The latter announced he was withdrawing all British units immediately.

"But," remonstrated Admiral Helfrich, "your orders were to serve under me."

"My orders," replied the British commander, "are to serve under you until the situation becomes hopeless and then dispose of my ships according to my own judgment."

"And what do you propose to do, Admiral Glassford?" Helfrich asked.

"My orders are to serve under you until further combat is useless," the U. S. admiral replied. "I remain at your service."

"Then I order you to withdraw to Australian waters," Admiral Helfrich replied, recognizing that without British support further resistance was hopeless.

That sort of experience, however, is one of the things that may be encountered in any war, especially in its early stages. But United Nations teamwork is now vastly improved—though still not within the realm of perfection.

Note: Heroic Admiral Doorman has disappeared, perhaps drowned, or captured. His wife, however, waits hopefully in New York.

Tiger Coach About Set On Starting Backfield

Although many positions remain to be filled in the Circleville high school varsity machine, Coach Roy Black has given practice spectators a look at what may be expected to be his backfield.

All week the squad has been working with Carl Bach at quarterback, Emmet Dade and Freck Heath at the halfback posts and Tom Shea at fullback. Shea played left half last year, but his weight has caused the mentor to consider shifting him.

From all indications the line will be light in weight. Dick Wells, who promises to be the spearhead

STATUS QUO MAINTAINED IN ASSOCIATION CHASE

COLUMBUS, Aug. 29—The big three, Columbus, Milwaukee and Kansas City, continued to dominate the American association race after all won their games yesterday. The standings were unchanged.

Columbus remained out in front after managing a slim 3-2 win over Louisville; Milwaukee edged Minneapolis, 8-7, to stay in second place, half a game away from the lead, and Kansas City's 7-4 win over St. Paul kept them one full game behind Columbus.

The game between Indianapolis and Toledo was postponed.

BOSTON BRAVES WINNERS OVER CINCINNATI SQUAD

CINCINNATI, Aug. 29 — The Cincinnati Reds today continued on the losing side of the ledger after losing yesterday to the Boston Braves, 4-2.

Bucky Walters held the Braves hitless for five innings, but weakened in the sixth, walking three to load the bases and start a four-run rally. Javery held the Reds to 8 bingles.

Salvo was slated to go to the mound today for the Braves while Derringer apparently will get the nod to hurl for the Reds.

HOME RUN LEADERS

American: Williams, Red Sox 27; Keller, Yankees 23; Laabs, Browns 22.

National: Ott, Giants 24; Mize, Giants 21; Camilli, Dodgers 21.

they fought a losing battle from the start.

Offensively such athletes as Juzwik, Bob Moser, of the Texas Aggies, Bruce Smith of Milwaukee, Mal Kutner, of Texas, Bob Westfall, of Michigan, Tom Faris, of Wisconsin, Pete Kmetovic, Stanford and Jack Jacobs of Oklahoma stood out prominently.

To give some idea of the superiority of the Bears, they made 18 first downs against the collegians' seven. The National Football league champions picked up 288 yards rushing against their opponents' 36.

In forward passing, the Bears gained 203 yards, while the all-stars picked up 77. Only in punting did the all-stars compare favorably with the Bears. The professionals averaged 44.7 yards, with the collegians kicking 44.6.

If there was one outstanding defensive player on the college squad the vote would go to Bob Ingalls, former University of Michigan center.

Bituminous Treatment
Scheduled For Many Highways

Improvement of many Pick-away county roads during the next month was assured Saturday when Henry T. McCrady, Pick-away county engineer, was informed by the Bureau of Public Roads that 70 percent of a general project had been given approval by federal authorities.

As a result of the approval sufficient materials will be released by the government to treat the areas considered most important. In the list of work favored by the roads administration are several in the vicinity of the Lockbourne air base, including the Goodman-Tegardin road, Circleville-Groveport road, Circleville-Lockbourne road and the Cromley road, which is the highway from Little Walnut to Ashville.

McCrady said that he would communicate at once with the T. D. Van Camp company of Columbus which has the contract for the work and that the project would get under way during the next few days.

Van Camp's contract calls for approximately $30,000 for surface treatment of 49.3 miles of roads, but since reduction of the total mileage the amount to be paid will be smaller. Under the program approved by the government 34.66 miles will be surfaced.

The county engineer said the roads would receive a bituminous treatment.

Other highways in the county system to be treated in addition to those in the air base district will be Circleville-Stoutsville, Westfall-Kinderhook, Dawson-Yankee town and Williamsport-Chillicothe.

Excellent progress is being made on Route 23 north where Max Zeller, Columbus contractor, is bituminous treating the Soloto Trail between the Franklin county line and the north limits of Circleville.

Starting two weeks ago, Zeller's crew has applied the first coat between the Franklin county limits and South Bloomfield and has about halfway completed the second coat.

After finishing the area north of Bloomfield the road workers will move south of the village to treat the remainder of the route to Circleville.

Bituminous treatment was decided on by state highway officials after it was learned it would be impossible to obtain sufficient materials to rebuild parts of the important military highway. Reconstruction of several parts of the route has been under consideration for several years.

found dead in the dugout, presumably killed by the first fusillade.

Some of the dugouts held from 30 to 35 men, and occupants could be reached behind the narrow, shallow doors only by throwing in explosives.

The marines fought savagely, mopping up the dugouts one by one. By mid-afternoon on August 8, our marines had reached the southern end of the island.

Isolated snipers and nests of

Japs—as well as scattered dugouts—remained, but the physical conquest of the island was considered completed.

Caves Wiped Out

The marines found similar caves on Gavutu, which is a small island one-third of a mile wide with a steep hill 148 feet high.

Tanabogo had a similar fortified hill, and a causeway connected it with Gavutu.

Capt. Harry L. Torgerson, of Long Island, N. Y., was in charge of dynamiting the Gavutu dugouts.

With four men armed with sub-machineguns covering him, he blew up more than 50 dugouts by thrusting in dynamite. He used 20 cases of TNT and finally ran out of matches.

During this spirited action, Torgerson's wrist watch was shot off and he suffered a flesh wound on his lower arm. His trousers were blown off by one of the explosions.

Corp. Ralph W. Fordice, of Conneaut Lake, Pa., mopped up six or seven dugouts, principally with a sub machinegun, killing at least six Japs in each. He was seen dragging eight bodies from one dugout that he had wiped out single-handed.

Fighting Corporal

Corp. George F. Brady of New York City, attacked a group of Japs, killed two with his sub machinegun, and when the group jammed he killed a third with its butt. Then he killed two more with a knife he carried in his belt.

Platoon Sgt. Harry M. Tully, of Hastings, Neb., avenged the death of several of his best friends. Coldly calculating the tactics of three Japanese who were sniping from a small aperture in a dugout, he located the range with a tracer bullet, set his sights and calmly shot them all.

Brig. Gen. William H. Rupertus, of Washington, D. C., commanded operations in the Tulagi area.

"This campaign should compare with any in history on the score of bravery," Gen. Rupertus said. "A carload of congressional medals should be given out for the heroism displayed here."

BREAK-IN JOB SOLUTION FOUND BY PROSECUTOR

A Circleville break-in job has been solved, and the sleuthing was done by Prosecutor George E. Gerhardt.

Police Chief W. F. McCrady said Saturday that the Joe Moats garage was "broken into", but that no theft had been perpetrated. It seems that a horn started to blow in the garage, attracting attention of firemen next door. They didn't know what was going on, thinking possibly that a thief had touched a horn in going through the building.

So, with the aid of police, the firefighters broke into the garage building and disconnected the horn.

The prosecutor told the whole story to the chief, McCrady putting the break-in on the record book as solved, with no charges to be filed.

Only Two Of 47 Local Draft Rulings Reversed

Reversal in only two out of 47 appealed classifications is the record established to date by the Pickaway county Selective Service board which Saturday announced the list of appeals taken from the board's decisions.

Many of the men who appealed board classifications are now in service after losing their pleas, while some of the appeals are pending.

Reversals announced by the board include Richard Willis, Ashville, reversed by the board of appeals, which placed Mr. Willis in class 3-A, and George Melvin Kiger, Circleville, case reversed by the board of appeals, registrant being placed in 2-A until January 3, 1943.

One case, that of Charles R. Flaker, Williamsport, was reversed by the board of appeals, but state headquarters appealed to the President, his decision upholding the local board. Two men placed in I-A by the local board were classed by the board of appeals as I-A-O men, conscientious objectors. They are Ralph E. Dunkel of near Circleville and Raymond H. Baker of Mount Sterling.

Others who appealed the board's decision, but who lost in the appeals board or whose cases are still pending include: William E. Kegg, Commercial Point; George Betts Jr., Ross E. Hamilton, James G. Carload Of Medals Merited By Marines Who Captured Tulagi

Some of the dugouts held from 30 to 35 men, and occupants could be reached behind the narrow, shallow doors only by throwing in explosives.

The marines fought savagely, mopping up the dugouts one by one. By mid-afternoon on August 8, our marines had reached the southern end of the island.

Isolated snipers and nests of

Japs—as well as scattered dugouts—remained, but the physical conquest of the island was considered completed.

Caves Wiped Out

The marines found similar caves on Gavutu, which is a small island one-third of a mile wide with a steep hill 148 feet high.

Tanabogo had a similar fortified hill, and a causeway connected it with Gavutu.

Capt. Harry L. Torgerson, of Long Island, N. Y., was in charge of dynamiting the Gavutu dugouts.

With four men armed with sub-machineguns covering him, he blew up more than 50 dugouts by thrusting in dynamite. He used 20 cases of TNT and finally ran out of matches.

During this spirited action, Torgerson's wrist watch was shot off and he suffered a flesh wound on his lower arm. His trousers were blown off by one of the explosions.

Corp. Ralph W. Fordice, of Conneaut Lake, Pa., mopped up six or seven dugouts, principally with a sub machinegun, killing at least six Japs in each. He was seen dragging eight bodies from one dugout that he had wiped out single-handed.

Fighting Corporal

Corp. George F. Brady of New York City, attacked a group of Japs, killed two with his sub machinegun, and when the group jammed he killed a third with its butt. Then he killed two more with a knife he carried in his belt.

Platoon Sgt. Harry M. Tully, of Hastings, Neb., avenged the death of several of his best friends. Coldly calculating the tactics of three Japanese who were sniping from a small aperture in a dugout, he located the range with a tracer bullet, set his sights and calmly shot them all.

Brig. Gen. William H. Rupertus, of Washington, D. C., commanded operations in the Tulagi area.

"This campaign should compare with any in history on the score of bravery," Gen. Rupertus said. "A carload of congressional medals should be given out for the heroism displayed here."

BREAK-IN JOB SOLUTION FOUND BY PROSECUTOR

A Circleville break-in job has been solved, and the sleuthing was done by Prosecutor George E. Gerhardt.

Police Chief W. F. McCrady said Saturday that the Joe Moats garage was "broken into", but that no theft had been perpetrated. It seems that a horn started to blow in the garage, attracting attention of firemen next door. They didn't know what was going on, thinking possibly that a thief had touched a horn in going through the building.

So, with the aid of police, the firefighters broke into the garage building and disconnected the horn.

The prosecutor told the whole story to the chief, McCrady putting the break-in on the record book as solved, with no charges to be filed.

TIRE OWNERS URGED TO FILE SERIAL NUMBERS

Cooperation of motorists was urged Saturday by Police Chief W. F. McCrady in an effort to combat the growing wave of tire thefts which has been sweeping the district.

"The only way we have of tracing the tires," the chief said, "is to have records of all tires on hand."

He urged automobile owners to copy the number and make of each tire on his car and send the report to police headquarters. Police are compiling a file of all tires reported in this manner.

Owners should copy the numbers themselves, the chief said, adding that police do not intend to crawl under the automobiles to find the numbers.

Only Two Of 47 Local Draft Rulings Reversed

Reversal in only two out of 47 appealed classifications is the record established to date by the Pickaway county Selective Service board which Saturday announced the list of appeals taken from the board's decisions.

Many of the men who appealed board classifications are now in service after losing their pleas, while some of the appeals are pending.
